

THE SCAR

The scar on my right hand, just below my elbow, reminds me of my childhood. I was nicknamed show boy because of my love for TV shows. My dad, frustrated by the long queues to renew our Cable TV subscription and the E16 error messages that usually followed, stopped paying for it and so I had to devise a new means to keep up with my favourite shows.

The Nduka's, our neighbours seemed to always have their Cable TV connected, so myself, and my twin brother will run off, climbing over our shoulders and poking our heads through the window just to watch this programme. We successfully did this for about 2 weeks without the knowledge of my parents until I slipped off my brother's shoulder during one of our 'escapades' and bruised my hand. This, of course, signalled the end of our secret mission and ushered in my next plan- the viewing centre.

The viewing centre was a simple plan; meet up with my friend at the local viewing centre and for a stipend, watch my favourite show. Of course, I wondered how they managed to enjoy uninterrupted cable services that got them connected almost instantly whenever they renewed it. I never bothered to ask though as my focus was on enjoying my show. This was however short-lived when my friend had to leave our neighbourhood, and so, the question had to be asked; how do you pay for your cable subscription with ease and get connected almost instantly?

And I had my answer-Quickteller. Apparently, with Quickteller, your subscription is renewed instantly, so apart from ditching the queues, you don't have to deal with e16 connection errors. And as the sharp guy that I am, I told pops about it and it's been smooth sailing ever since.

This scar is a reminder of what should have been prevented if only I knew about Quickteller. Anyway, here's hoping my story saves you from getting scarred.

MY 'VILLAGE PEOPLE' ARE AT WORK AGAIN

"Ahh, my village people have succeeded" "Where is this thing o"? These were the words that filled the room as Lucy frantically searched for a utility bill.

Lucy had applied for a contract and needed a utility bill as proof of address verification to complete the process. With the deadline being close, she wasn't only frustrated at the possibility of losing out on the contract but also frustrated by the thought of having to rearrange her room again- a task that takes her an average of 5 hours.

"I cannot come and kill myself", she said to herself as she sat on her heap of clothes, bringing out her phone to check for messages and distract herself with the trending gist online. Scrolling through, she comes across a Quickteller post that basically makes her day- Pay for your electricity bill and use the receipt as proof of address verification.

As fast as the quick in Quickteller, Lucy immediately downloads the Quickteller App, pays for her electricity bill there and let's just say two things happened afterwards; Lucy won the contract and never looked anywhere else to pay her bills, especially her electricity bills.

Quickteller was just enough and so, Lucy 1- Village People 0
